MESSAGE

Some inspired innovative and progressive farmers of Karnataka shifted to more sustainable, environment friendly organic farming methods from conventional farming methods during 1980s' owing to the high cost on inputs and stagnation of yield levels in crops. Through their experience over years, they found that the Organic agriculture as a better alternative to conventional farming. Gradual spreading of the organic cultivation concepts in the early years, took shape of an organic farming movement which made the Government to bring out a separate Organic Farming Policy of its own during 2004 and so also to initiate steps for promoting organic agriculture in the State.

Today, organic farming has grown in a bigger way and grown as a sector with many stakeholders. The Department of Agriculture and Research Institute on Organic Farming, University of Agricultural Sciences, GKVK, Bangalore have put efforts to bring out a directory containing information on various stakeholders of organic farming. I hope this book will be very useful for all the stakeholders, the consumers and help in promoting organic agriculture in the Karnataka State at large.

Foreword

Growing awareness of consumers and to use safe and healthy food and need to address ill effects of chemicals in agriculture production, restoration of soil health and fertility has played a key role in the emergence of organic agriculture sector since last two decades. The journey in organic agriculture started by a small number of innovative and progressive farmers, farmers' groups, NGOs, civil society organizations in Karnataka state is now being driven on a huge scale by State and Central Governments, food processing industry, exporters, certifiers and domestic supply chain companies.

Organic farming is gaining momentum in India and in particular in Karnataka state, is at greater pace because it is sustainable, adoptable and eco-friendly. Although, domestic market is at the early stage and unable to utilize the existing production potential, increased awareness towards healthy and safe organic foods have surged the demand for organic products especially in urban areas. It is witnessed that there is almost 20-25% increased growth in organic sector per annum during the last 10 years. In spite of economic recession fears the growth of organic sector is unaffected. Availability of different types of organic products, less dependency on chemical fertilizers, Government initiatives for promoting organic farming, investment by corporate giants are likely to push the market for organic foods in India.

Creation of effective backward- forward linkages play a vital role in promotion of organic sector. There are several stake holders right from production to certification, marketing and export activities in organic farming sector. For the benefit of all the stake holders and consumers, Karnataka State Department of Agriculture and Research Institute on Organic Farming, UAS Bangalore have brought out the "Organic Farming Directory" of stake holders. I feel it would benefit the sector as a whole and help in promoting organic farming in Karnataka state.

1. Organic Farming Concepts and Scenario

Organic Agriculture has grown out of the conscious effort by inspired people to create the best possible relationship between the earth and mankind. Concept of organic farming is very much native to our land and our farmers by default are organic. The farmers of India and China are the farmers of 40 centuries and it was organic farming that sustained them. While, there is continuum of thought from earlier days to the present, the modern organic movement is radically different from its original form. It has environmental sustainability at its core in addition to the concerns for healthy soil - healthy food and healthy people. The concepts of organic farming at large are:

- Nature is the best role model for farming
- The entire system is based on the intimate understanding of nature's ways
- The soil in this system is a living entity
- The microbes and other organisms living in the soil are significant contributors for its fertility on a sustained basis and must be protected and nurtured
- The total environment of soil structure to soil cover is more important

Concepts

Organic Farming today is a method of farming system which primarily aims at cultivating the land and raising crops in such a way, as to keep the soil alive and in good health. This could be achieved through use of organic wastes and other biological materials along with beneficial microbes to release nutrients to crops for increased sustainable production. "Organic agriculture is a holistic production management system which promotes and enhances agro-ecosystem health, including biodiversity, biological cycles, and soil biological activity. It emphasises the use of management practices in preference to the use of off-farm inputs, taking into account that regional conditions require locally adapted systems. This is accomplished by using agronomic, biological and mechanical methods as opposed to using synthetic materials, to fulfill any specific function within the system" (FAO/WHO Codex Alimentarius Commission, 1999). Increasing consciousness about conservation of environment as well as of soil health hazards caused by agro-chemicals has brought a major shift in consumer preference towards food quality, particularly in the developed countries. Global consumers are increasingly looking forward to organic food that is considered safe and hazard-free.

Organic agriculture is one among the broad spectrum of production methods that are supportive of the environment. Organic production systems are based on specific standards precisely formulated for food production and aim at achieving agro-eco systems, which are socially and ecologically sustainable. It is based on minimizing the use of external inputs through use of on-farm resources efficiently compared to industrial agriculture. Thus the use of synthetic fertilizers and pesticides is avoided.

'Organic' in organic agriculture is labeling term that denotes products that have been produced in accordance with certain standards during food production, handling, processing and marketing stages, and certified by a duly constituted certification body or authority. The organic label is therefore a process claimed rather than a product claim.

The interest in organic agriculture in developing countries is growing because it requires less financial inputs and places more reliance on the available natural and human resources. But, in recent years, there has been a lot of debate between the proponents of organic farming and a section of the community who question the scientific validity and feasibility of organic farming. The most often debated issues on organic agriculture are:

- Can organic farming produce enough food for everybody?
- Is it possible to meet the nutrient requirements of crop entirely from organic sources?
- Are there any significant environmental benefits of organic farming?
- Is the food produced by farming superior in quality?
- Is organic agriculture economically feasible?
- Is it possible to manage pests and diseases in organic farming?

The available data seem to indicate the organic agriculture offers a comparative advantage in areas with less rainfall and relatively low natural and soil fertility levels. Labour realizes a good return and this is important where paid labour is almost non-existent. Organic agriculture does not need costly investments in irrigation, energy and external inputs, but rather organic agricultural policies have the potential to improve local food security, especially in marginal areas. Possibly, the greatest impact of organic agriculture is on the mindset of people. It uses traditional and indigenous farming knowledge, while introducing selected modern technologies to manage and enhance diversity, to incorporate biological principles and resources into farming systems, and to ecologically intensify agriculture production. Instead of being an obstacle to progress, traditions may become an integral part of it. By adopting organic agriculture, farmers are challenged to take on new knowledge and perspectives, and to innovate. This leads to an increased engagement in farming which can trigger greater opportunities for rural employment and economic upliftment. Thus through greater emphasis on use of local resources and self-reliance, conversion to organic agriculture definitely contributes to the empowerment of farmers and local communities. Considering the potential environmental benefits of organic production and its compatibility with integrated agricultural approaches to rural development, organic agriculture may be considered as a development vehicle for developing countries like India in particular.

A major challenge is certainly its entry into policy making arena, its entry into anonymous global market and transformation of organic products into commodities.

Status

The global growth of organic agriculture is estimated at 25 to 30 per cent. As per the 2011 data, certified organic production was undertaken by 162 countries and the area under organic farming was around 37.2 million hectares (0.86% of total agricultural land), with 1.8 million producers and market size 62.9 billion US dollars.

There are three categories of organic farmers in India. The first category of organic farmers are those who are in 'no-input or low-input' use zones, for them organics is a way of life and they practise it as a tradition (may be under compulsion in the absence of resources needed for conventional high input intensive agriculture). Second category of farmers are those who have recently adopted the organics in the wake of ill effects (may be in the form of reduced soil fertility, food toxicity or increasing cost and diminishing returns) of conventional agriculture. The third category comprise of farmers and entrepreneurs who have systematically adopted the commercial organic agriculture to capture emerging market opportunities and premium prices. These third category commercial farmers who attract the most attention. Emerging from hardly 42000 ha under organic farming during 2003-04, the area has increased to 4.5 million ha in India during 2011-12 ( 5.476 lakh producers). Increasing retail and online presence of organic food stores, growing demand from international markets and rising health consciousness are anticipated to spur the demand for organic foods in India.

Farmers of Karnataka are pioneers in organic agriculture and they have developed many different systems of cultivation through indigenous knowledge base. They have developed their own methods of using organic wastes and holistic pest control methods to control the pests and diseases. The organic movement which started in the state since the last two decades is rapidly growing because our farmers have realized the ill effects of conventional chemical agriculture on soil, environment, and excessive dependence on external inputs, high cost of cultivation and greater concern of public for consumption of healthy organically produced food commodities. With this, we are observing a constant increase in demand for organic products and the market size is growing at rapid rate. There were about 17500 certified organic farmers and 82834 ha.(2010-11) area was under organic certification. Although, there are much more organic farmers producing variety of organic commodities, their area and products are yet to be certified. There is a great need for educating and also facilitating organic farmers in certification of organic products.

Products for Use in Fertilising and Soil Conditioning

In organic agriculture the maintenance of soil fertility may be achieved through the recycling of organic material whose nutrients are made available to crops through the action of soil micro-organisms and bacteria. Many of these inputs are restricted for use in organic production. In this appendix “restricted” means that the conditions and the procedure for use shall be set by the certification programme. Factors such as contamination, risk of nutritional imbalances and depletion of natural resources shall be taken into consideration.
